

Ian Potter

Contract Quality Engineer at HP Chemie Pelzer (Retired)

November 9, 2017, Ian reported directly to Elwyn

Elwyn was my Manager for some months during 2013.

I can say with honesty that he was one of the most respected and approachable Managers I have had the good fortune to meet.

He was certainly the most academically qualified of any having attained all four of the Qualifications in the American Society for Quality and one of only a few to accomplish this.

Elwyn leads by example and was supportive to me throughout our working relationship.

Listening was a strength reinforced by tolerance.

He exudes a professional demeanour, is assertive but not aggressive and appears to command respect with little effort.

His depth of knowledge on multiple Quality Tools and techniques is admirable. We have worked well together to resolve technical issues establishing Root Causes and implementing Containment and Corrective actions.

Elwyn is a Quality Professional and extremely competent and capable at the highest levels.

I firmly believe that he would be an asset to any company and would in my opinion be part of the "intellectual capital".

He is also quite a modest man which is an endearing aspect of his character

I worked with Elwyn at BT Cellnet at the start of its transformation into O2 UK and in most need of innovative problem-solving and a structured quality approach. Elwyn is a thought-leader in his field who is an impressive advocate of quality techniques. In my experience he has a unique ability to convey the full life cycle quality approach in a way that inspires middle and senior management and speaks to them in terms of compelling cost-benefits. At a personal level he is an open, supportive professional that I found a real pleasure to work with. Inspiring subject-matter expert on quality management and a supportive colleague through the difficult times. A real pleasure to work with.

I worked with Elwyn when he was both Quality Engineering Manager and Project Timing Manager. I found him to be innovative and effective, in particular the project management system which he established for the launch of new products proved to be successful. I would recommend Elwyn as a key member in any effective team.
